The Graduate School of Education (GSOE) at the University of California, Riverside continues to develop its research and scholarly capacity through its nationally recognized faculty and maintain its place among the outstanding University of California institutions. We are growing steadily and seek highly productive and innovative faculty who are committed to preparing the next generation of higher education leaders and scholars. We invite applications and nominations for a full-time, 9-month Non-Tenured Track Visiting Assistant Professor position in the area of Higher Education Administration and Policy.

This is a one-year appointment for the 2021-2022 academic year. Duties for the Visiting Assistant Professor will include course instruction and advising of MEd students, including their final capstone project. The successful candidate would teach 4-5 courses such as the following: Campus Environments, Climate, and Culture (248V), Critical Issues in Higher Education (248I), Higher Education Policy (248J), College Student Development (248R), and History of Higher Education in the United States (248U). Our expectation is that all instruction will be in-person for the 2021-2022 academic year. The position will commence as early as September 1, 2021 or as negotiated.

The UCR Higher Education Administration and Policy graduate program seeks to prepare student affairs and postsecondary leaders who understand and work to transform institutional structures, policies, and practices contributing to inequities in higher education and society. We seek candidates who have the capacity to be exemplary scholars in the field of higher and postsecondary education, including established early-stage scholars, postdoctoral fellows, and recent doctoral degree recipients. Preference will be given to candidates who have experience or evidence of potential for quality teaching and student mentoring.

Minimum Qualifications include: Earned doctorate in higher education or a related social science discipline, university-level teaching experience, and experience advising students. Salary and will be commensurate with an appointment within the University of California system.

Inquiries should be directed to search committee chair Dr. Eddie Comeaux (eddie.comeaux@ucr.edu). For inquiries regarding the application process, please contact Dorria Burgess, Academic Personnel, at dorria.burgess@ucr.edu.
